If you still not own a tweed suit, it would be an excellent thing for you to invest in for the fall and winter months. A tweed suit is absolutely perfect for your winter wardrobe, because its pieces can be incorporated separately into your wardrobe, as well as worn all together.

So what needs to be known is that what tweed is actually. Well, it is a somewhat rough-to-the-touch wool fabric which is used for the preparation of many clothing for men and women. It originated in Scotland, and has a rather loose weave, which makes it very comfortable and flexible. The word "tweed" itself refers to the weave of fabric rather than the pattern in the fabric. So when you see different types of tweeds, this describes the pattern in which it has been woven. For example, the most popular type of tweed is Harris Tweed, which has a rich overall colour due to subtle flecks of patches in purple, red, and orange within the fabric. Herringbone is also popular in tweed, and is characterized by its diagonal V-shaped weave, usually in black and white and looks great if used in the preparation of the menâ€™s suits. These tweed suits can be worn both in formal as well as informal occasions but it has to be necessarily be paired with a perfect shirt and trouser. Especially mens tweed jackets can be used in a number of informal occasions as well in our day to day life.

Now one thing that men often overlook when it comes to suits is that they are great for mixing and matching. A two piece suit gives you the option to mix it in three different ways: wearing the pants separately, wearing the jacket separately, or wearing both pieces of the suit together. However, by adding just one additional piece and purchasing a three piece tweed suit, you can suddenly turn three pieces into seven different options to wear: you can wear the pants separately, the vest separately, the jacket separately, the pants and vest together, the vest and jacket together, the pants and jacket together, or all three pieces together. That is a lot of options out of one suit that makes your wardrobe dynamic.

Because tweed is a textured fabric, it immediately conveys an image of richness and warmth when you wear it. This makes a three piece tweed suit great for your fall and winter formal events. If you intend to wear all pieces together, look for at somewhat neutral tweed, such as a dark brown Harris Tweed. The natural bits of colour in the fabric will lend interest to your outfit. Tweed jackets for men can be worn at informal occasions with a pair of pure denim jeans which look very elegant and stylish. As you can see, an investment in tweed is more than just having a great standby suit for your fall and winter events. The pieces can easily be incorporated into your daily wardrobe so that you can get the most wear out if it.
