Delhi is the largest city by area in India and eighth largest metropolitan in the world in the terms of people. Being the foremost political, educational and business center in India, Delhi has earned the position of an international city. Along with prehistoric medieval wonders, the metropolitan also boasts of a stylish contemporary side. This matchless combination of the historical past with the current era adds to the demand of the capital as a travelerâ€™s destination.

The city is precisely divided into Old and New Delhi. Old Delhi occupies the west bank of River Yamuna and is well-known for its special bazaars, medieval monuments and attention-grabbing archaeological sites. A lot of the cityâ€™s top attractions for example the Red fort, Jama Masjid and Chandni Chowk are located in this part of the capital.

New Delhi was built south of the old city in 1920 and was declared the capital of India after the nation achieved freedom in 1947. This part of the city consists of the significant British era constructions and headquarters identified for their European structural design and lots of modern architectural wonders. An array of high-class malls, coffee bars, bars and restaurants in New Delhi add to the city's contemporary facade and are number one tourist spots in the current part of the north Indian capital.

Shopping in Delhi is bliss for those who do not mind to push their way into busy markets and bargain with salespersons. Huge western style shopping malls and chic shopping markets also cloud the city's horizon. The metropolitan has everything to attract the shopping buffs.

Delhi is a well-known dining destination amongst tourists. Despite serving mouth-watering Indian cuisines, there are ample excellent international restaurants in New Delhi that serve dishes from around the world.

Saket is one of Delhiâ€™s fashionable areas. From food to shopping and everything in between, the hip traveler will discover that time flies when oneâ€™s in Saket.

Entertainment in Saket malls are complete amusement zones and have numerous choices, drawing large footfalls from Delhi NCR region. Its strategic location â€“ near to Noida, Gurgaon, and Central Delhi â€” acts as a crowd-puller drawing common people from diverse areas. The saket malls have the maximum of coffee shops, restaurants and food court in Delhi. The place is also home to the PVR Cinemas in New Delhi.
