You have a busy schedule. Who doesn't these days? It's hard to keep track of time and your schedule but you have tools for these. Watches and calendars let you know what time it is and what day it is, things that it's easy for us to forget in the rush we often find ourselves in. If you have a large watch collection you likely have a watch box to keep track of that. Here's an interesting concept though. Since have a busy schedule filled with different events to which different watches would be suited, why not use your watch box as another calendar and order your watches in the order you will need to use them?

Morning workout: In that first space in your watch box, place your watch that is designed to be worn during your athletic pursuits. The watch with the tight, durable strap and perhaps a heart monitor to see just how much it's pumping when you're at your peak.

Business meeting: This is the watch to wear when you've got a big deal going down and you want to send the message that you are a serious businessperson with a lot to bring to the table. Probably that watch with the sturdy chrome wristband and the three miniature dials on the face. If they could see your classy watch box as well that would drive the point home even further.

Romantic evening: When you're going for class and distinction and dressing to impress, you'll probably want the gold watch with the roman numerals, or perhaps the heirloom watch you inherited from your grandfather that still works just as well and looks just as good as it did all those years ago. Either one fits just as well in your watch box and should do for this very important time in your day.

Going Casual: Going out shopping or just out on the town for some relaxation? Leisurely reach into your watch box and pull out the simple number with the black strap and the numbered face with the big hand and the little hand; simple but serviceable. No need to overdo it.

Weekend Getaway: You've got that hiking excursion planned for the next couple of days. You'll have to leave your watch box behind but before you go be sure to pick up the durable, all-weather watch with the compass and possibly a GPS locator. Hopefully you won't get lost but better safe than sorry.

Home again...

And back in the watch box the watch goes. Now you can see by how you've arranged things what's in store for you in the days to come. The events of your life are diverse and so, then, must your timepieces be. Your watch box, as reliable as that heirloom watch of your grandfather's is able to keep them all organized for you and ready for you to retrieve them at the times they are most needed.
