When it comes to planning stag parties, we are always tempted to fall back on the conventional. However, for a change, you can try your hands at something different. There is no harm in getting a bit experimental- you not only get to develop muscles and memories, but might as well discover a passion for kayaking or paintballing.

Stag parties present you with the unique chance to get a taste of everything that you may never have a second shot at. Therefore, start the day with a sumptuous breakfast and then go straight to the roads. If your neighbors will not blow you up for doing so, then put on a fireworks display. Additionally, paintballing fights, spending an afternoon at the shooting range are some other activities worth considering. Laser tag and paintball also qualify as relatively inexpensive ways of getting some exercise.

If you do not have friends, then the above options are worth considering. However, for people who usually hang around in a large group, there are more choices available. To begin with, there is hardly any dearth of destinations for stag parties where a weekend layover would invariably mean a relaxing and quick getaway.

There are countless stag party destinations, both within and outside Europe, for you to choose. Once you have decided the right location for the party, depending on the nature of the chosen destination, there could be so many stag party ideas to try your hands on. Among other places, Ibiza, Manchester, Bristol, Bratislava, Barcelona are some of the most sought after locations for stag parties.

So what exactly are the activities one can associate with these outdoor stag parties? The answer to this question is quiet tricky. Honestly speaking, the list of stag do activities can go on. However, of all others, water sports, spa therapy and bar crawling are considered the most popular among tourists.
