Article published on July 3rd 2012 | Travel

Situated in south-west London between Kew and Richmond, is the most delightful place to visit, Kew Gardens. These Royal Botanical Gardens are a wonderful place to spend an evening exploring its history, heritage and horticulture. Those with a fondness for flowers, plants and all things outdoors will enjoy adventuring around this wide open space. Even when the country is a mixture of sunshine and showers, it is worthy of a visit.

The gardens, boasting the worldâ€™s largest display of living plants and flowers. There are even preservation greenhouses holding some of the most precious of specimens. Respected as being an attraction and notable place in both London and the country, many people journey to take in its setting. If you are lucky enough to live not too far from the gardens, and have yet to visit, why not take a Kew Gardens taxi and see for yourself? You can read a multitude of literature on this picturesque, tranquil place, but nothing compares to experiencing it first hand.

However, it isnâ€™t just the gardens that attracts many a visitor to the area. Having a prestigious heritage, of many dukes and duchesses residing here, is a notable reason why many wish to find out more about Kewâ€™s history. When you choose to visit Kew, there isnâ€™t an opportunity for boredom to strike. Opting to journey in a taxi to Kew Gardens and its surrounding area, you will have the opportunity to capture the sights and surroundings. This includes, Kew Palace. Understandably forgotten, in the grand scheme of things, the palace is a small part of what is a large space, cover 121 hectares.

If you want to make a day of it, consider this an opportunity to exercise those legs, keep fit and take in the fresh outdoors. The vast open space may seem daunting to those who arenâ€™t used to getting out and exploring, but once you get started, youâ€™ll realise that you can thoroughly enjoy yourself. If you would rather learn from the experts, then you can take one of their guided tours around the grounds, conducted by trained volunteers. You can easily spend a substantial amount of time here, what with the many attractions there are here. Including the palace, grounds, museum, gallery and much much more. At the end of the day, when you have seen just about all there is to see, you may wish to call from a minicab from Kew Gardens. Youâ€™ll probably have done enough walking for one day! An adventure in Kew is not to be ignored, youâ€™re sure to enjoy yourselves.
