Are you planning for migration to Australia with a purpose of obtaining permanent resident status in the country? If YES, then to do so, there are certain very essential things that you have to take into consideration in this regard.

There are basically two types of immigration visa categories for Australia that provide permanent residency in the country, namely: Skilled Independent and Skilled Sponsored visa. However, choosing the right visa category is a very crucial job, as acceptance or refusal of your visa application will depend a lot more on this first step.

When it comes to educational requirements, to qualify for Australia immigration under the skilled independent category, post secondary education is compulsory along with proficiency in English language. Besides, the applicants have to make the current minimum score of 120 points to qualify under this category.

Under the visa category of Skilled Sponsored, getting a nomination from the state or a territory of Australian Government is necessary.
