The birthing process and the first few hours of a puppyâ€™s life are absolutely vital to their long term health and this means it is important for the right equipment to be used at the early stages of the life of a pet. If you regularly breed pooches then you will have already used a whelping box and will understand that having the right whelping box for newborn pups is essential for their health.

There are many different kinds of whelping box to choose from and when picking a whelping box to use during the birthing process, dog breeders and other animal professionals should opt for whelping box solutions from an experienced company with the knowledge to recommend the right whelping box for their needs.

Here at Petnap we specialise in whelping box options and we stock a huge variety of whelping box solutions, including both disposable and reusable whelping box solutions, giving our customers the freedom they need to make the best choice for their breeding needs.

Those who do not use a whelping box very regularly and do not want to spend cash on something which will only be used once could be interested in our whelping box hire packages, which are comprehensive, competitively priced and convenient.

Many of our customers choose a whelping boxes from our reusable range, and these whelping box solutions feature convenient removable sections at the front, as well as a hole for a heat pad cable at the back. Those buying this kind of whelping box could also pick from a range of optional extras, including fleeces.

This whelping box comes with puppy rails for safety and is one of our best selling options.

All of these whelping box devices are available in different sizes, and those who have not used a whelping box before can give our experienced team a call for help with picking the right size. As a general rule, a whelping box should be big enough to accommodate the mother as well as have an extra four inches to allow for puppy rails.

Visit us here at Petnap and find the right whelping box for your needs.
