This explains why the conventional form of electronic document storage such as compact disks, floppy drives; hard drives or pen drives are slowly becoming redundant. These are no longer treated as reliable especially in situations where a catastrophic situation has emerged. For instance, incidents of fire taking place at work places have become a common feature. Under these cases, documents stored in compact disks, floppy drives, hard drives or pen drives have a chance of getting damaged completely.

This form of document management system has brought comfort to millions of workers in offices across the globe. This is evident from the fact that they can now easily create, upload and access these documents with use of a computer alone! Playing a crucial role in this regard is the presence of shared drives that enables people to access it from the other network computers. In instances where the network is in an offsite mode, this form of document management helps in preventing hackers to get access. This is where presence of electronic document management software has facilitated many organizations to buy peace of mind as far as safety and security of these documents is concerned. This has giving away the earlier practice of keeping hard copies of important documents. The modern practice is to create and generate documents electronically.
