If the budget that youâ€™ve prepared for your car purchase isnâ€™t that big, this doesnâ€™t mean that y should purchase a brand-new car with undesirable features and performance ratings. There are a lot of used cars that you can buy that are still much better than some brand-new models. The trick here is to determine which cars are better to buy used, and which ones are not even worth a second look.

When looking for used cars to buy Toronto dealerships, you would usually take four considerations into account: reliability, value, safety, and availability. However, there is a consideration that not a lot of people think is very important, which is age. A used car that is more than seven years old would most probably have too many miles on it, and a car that is less than two years old would still cost nearly as much as it did when brand-new. If you want a good used car, you might want to buy those that are around two to seven years old to get the most out of your money.

Compact Sedan

The best compact sedan that you can buy from Toronto used car dealerships would be the 2004-2009 models of the Hyundai Elantra. The complete redesign of the model in 2001 managed to attract a lot of attention, and the sedan offering that was released in 2007 sealed the deal. Solid build, reliable, fuel-efficient, extensive cargo space, and impressive safety ratings what more can you ask for?

Midsize Sedan

The 2002 Nissan Altima provided drivers with a fun-to-drive personality that was unmatched in that model year. A redesign in 2007 made a good car much better with the introduction of handsome styling, a much nicer interior, and ultra-smooth operation paired with increased fuel efficiency. Overall, itâ€™s a good midsized car with athletic handling and great performance.

Large Sedan

The 2006-2009 Hyundai Azera is a great option when choosing among Toronto used cars because itâ€™s relatively inexpensive even when brand new, yet it offers a lot of luxury conveniences. Offering an upscale appearance inside and out, a lot of safety and comfort features, and a smooth and refined performance, the Azera is one fine car to drive.

Coupe

Though not technically a sedan, coupes are still usually grouped with them due to same bodywork, and the best Toronto used cars to buy in this category would be the BMW 3 Series. Itâ€™s everything any coupe should be: stylish, sporty, and practical.

It is always good to look at several models when looking at Toronto used cars so you can get your moneyâ€™s worth. For more information, you can visit edmunds.com/car-reviews/best-used-cars.html or autos.yahoo.com/news/best-used-cars-2011.html?page=all.
