The transportation has become a necessity these days as the location demand and availability are not always the same. For short distance travel, cars are the most convenient. While there are many cars in the market today, to suit multiple needs of yours, there is a parallel market for used cars too. So, even in this category, you have as many choices as you can for.

But buying pre-owned cars can be tricky. You need to careful that you are not duped by the used car dealers, that you get the best deal available. And most of the time, you get the best deal only after a thorough research of the market. When deciding which car to buy, you need to weigh your priorities. Ask yourself, how much are you willing to pay for a used car? What will it mainly are used for? How long do you want to use the car before you buy another one? Based on these questions, decide on a model or a set of models from which you will decide later.

After deciding which car to buy or which cars to choose from, find the best or most recommended used cars dealers in your area or city. If the dealer only aims to sell and not satisfy customers, you may well find a car that seems good from outside but fails in its functions. Once you find one, look for the car(s) you decided on. When you find the car, do not make a hasty decision. You should be as informed as possible about the used car.

It is better to know the history of the used cars before buying it. Stay away from cars that have been modified or repainted if you do not know the reason behind the changes. Stay away from repossessed cars also, as you may get embroiled in an unwanted financial complication. You should know when the car was bought, when it was sold, its insurance and how often and where it was serviced. Knowing its insurer or servicing station will allow you to know more about the car when you call them. Check the warranty the dealer offers on the used car and the certification of the car by the dealer. You need to know that the dealer will take responsibility if the purchase turned out to be bad.

Check the carâ€™s documents, engine size, odometer and date of manufacture. You need to know as much facts about the car as possible. Before making the final decision, get the car completely checked and definitely go for a test drive to be absolutely sure.

Once you decide on buying the car, ensure that you get a good bargain with the dealer on its price and the dealersâ€™ commission. And once you buy it, take or ask for documents related to the car as an official record of your purchase. Take duplicate keys, get it serviced and insured. After all this, the car is good to go!
