Contractual Terms for Collocation Services by Julia Roger

Article published on July 11th 2012 | Business

Most of the web experts consider Dedicated Web Hosting as the best hosting option available until date. Large and complicated websites with high bandwidth as well as strong requirement for disk space always requires dedicated server for hosting. In addition, websites that require strong security are launched through the help of this particular type of hosting. Although there are so many advantages to consider, but still dedicated hosting is not the best option to avail. However, in spite of all its advantages, dedicated servers are not the best hosting option.

Colocation services are type of server hosting procedure where clientâ€™s server is placed carefully at the data center of a third party. Client purchases some specific server software and hardware tools (fully licensed products) according to their choice, and then carefully place them in the data center. In Colocation services, clients have much flexibility to secure, maintain, and manage their purchased (or leased) servers. Third party data center provides server space, redundancy, security, UPS, air temperature control, and Managed Server Solutions. This type of server hosting is considered to be the most expensive and is mainly preferred by those who are highly experienced in professional server administration.

Colocation facilities are provided mostly on certain contractual terms. Have a look at the list:

Offering Network connectivity in either of the two ways: House Blend or Cross Connect.

Lockable secured rack cabinet

Top level physical security like logging, biometric & badge access, and video surveillance

AC and DC power formats

cooling

Live monitoring of all the above functions in case there is any failure

The most common customers of colocation services are telecom companies, e-commerce ventures, and major disaster management organizations. Each and every Collocation center features strong security and is guarded on a continuous basis.
