Different Types of Roll Bar by James Blee

Article published on February 21st 2012 | Business

Racing is a passion for many but safety must have a safe spot in your priorities. As to increase, safety measures for you and your car while driving you can opt for roll bars. Before considering, purchase and installation of such a piece there are some things you should know.

First of all, there are different types of roll bars and that can be added to your car. A bar is a safety measure installed in between the driver and the passenger seats that is meant to sustain the cars weight in the event of a rollover. Any common roll bar will be connected at four points: two on the floor and two on the rear deck. The average cost of a roll bar rounds up to 200 or 300 $ and will require up to 6 hours for installation. Other costs for a bar are an added weight of 60 pounds and the loss of your back seat use.

Unless looking for quality and safety from your bar, pick a style bar which is designed to look exactly the same as the real deal and lacks any functionality whatsoever. They are lighter and fairly more inexpensive however, they are a threat to you or the passengers, as they cannot prevent the critical chassis point from buckling on impact and in the case they break, they will turn into projectiles inside the car. But before buying a bar, do check the quality and function thoroughly. Try and buy from a reliable source so that f you face any trouble in future you may get help instantly.

Driving a car burdens you with the legal and moral responsibility of the passengers inside and for that respect adding a roll bar to your car should not be a haste decision. Thus, do install a roll bar in your car at earliest and drive safely.
