Many fire departments, companies that install equipments and maintain fire protection systems in buildings as well as fire safety organizations can provide fire extinguisher training to many interested individuals. The training will teach a person how to properly operate a fire extinguisher including situations such as metal and chemical fires. In some places the training is required for safety reasons while others strongly recommend the procedure. This will also give opportunities to the general public to learn the basic operation most especially those who have not tried to handle a fire extinguisher in their entire life.

Some fire departments in Perth, Australia will provide free instruction to the public on how to operate a fire extinguisher. Sometimes a firefighter will come in any community workshops, classrooms, office or a few small groups to demonstrate the proper use of the equipment. In the demonstration the instructor will try to start a small fire and give the training participants a chance to put out the fire using a fire extinguisher to make them more comfortable during dangerous fire situations. He will also emphasize during the fire extinguisher training what will happen when people go wrong with the equipment or method used to put out the fire. He will start a chemical or grease controlled fire and try to extinguish it with water which will spread out the grease fire. This will enhance people to keep a multipurpose fire extinguisher in the vicinity to ensure that they will never make a mistake in case of emergency.

Fire extinguisher training Perth can be also provided by independent organizations along with fire prevention training to teach people how to properly use a fire extinguisher. These organizations usually hold public classes and will travel to a specific location where the training was requested to take place. Some of their training are offered at low rates and sometimes free of charge to ensure that every individual will understand the proper way of responding quickly and safely to a fire. Fire extinguisher training Perth is also taught online through services that holds fire prevention training. In a workplace where there is a high risk of fire, certain government regulation will require fire extinguisher training.

For employees who have never done any training must request permission to attend a workshop including those experienced individuals who needs to take refresher courses for the lessons. Sometimes it easy to forgot the function of safety equipment if it has been years that you have never interact with it again. Therefore it is important that employees must know how to grab and activate the equipment during emergency cases. They must also be aware on how to response during the situation to avoid panic and confusion leading to a mistake with disastrous consequences.
