Slowly at first, but now faster and faster, the world is coming to a realisation that we need to do something urgently about our carbon emissions.

More than 40,000 tons of rubbish collected from ordinary households are first sent to the waste handling facility. This is where the sorted rubbish is categorised separately into various types of recyclables, to be sent off to processing factories; also hazardous materials, or materials requiring specialised disposal, as well as waste that is suitable for potential compost.

The City of Sydney is spearheading a green trend in handling garbage that should make a huge difference to the collective carbon footprint of the citizens in this region.

Just as we find emerging in most of the progressive cities in the world, with rubbish removal Sydney, advanced waste treatment facilities are being developed. The days of dumping a muddle of mixed rubbish into a landfill are gone.

If the garbage is first sorted by householders into separate bins, the task is easier, and the quality of the materials that are processed is much better. This tedious and time consuming task can also be managed by specialist rubbish removal firms. You will be pleased to find that there are really cheap rubbish removal services available.

Is there a way to reduce the waste that we throw away? It is estimated that almost half a ton of rubbish is discarded by most householders each year. It is also estimated that almost three quarters of this is recoverable or recyclable.

Here are a few ideas that can help reduce the amount of rubbish we throw away:

Packaging can account for a huge waste of materials. We should try and support companies who do not use excessive packaging for their products.

It makes economic sense to buy the best quality of goods and appliances that we can. Cheap throw-away items always cost more in the long run. They can also require complicated processes to recycle.

Get rid of unwanted goods by means of a garage sale, or donate to second hand charity shops.

We can start a simple worm farm, or compost maker, and keep all food scraps. Our gardens will benefit, and our health too, by growing organic vegetables. All this will hardly cost a thing. â€˜Greenâ€™ living saves medical costs too.

You may be wondering what you should do about unusual and possibly hazardous waste. If you hire a firm that understands rubbish removals, they will be able to advise you and deal with this.

These should be experts at handling all kinds of refuse, both from the home and from the business sector. They must also be very eco- conscious and know how to dispose of everything in the most environmentally friendly way.

You may, however, prefer to personally make use of the City of Sydneyâ€™s annual household chemical cleanout. Such items as chemicals and solvents, batteries, aerosols, paints, poisons and pesticides, gas bottles, fire extinguishers and globes and lights are accepted. You need to call the New South Wales Environment line to find out the details and the next collection date.

There is also an e-waste drop off day from time to time where you can discard such things as old computers and printers, as well as other electronic goods.

If you are a medical practitioner, a veterinary surgeon, a farmer, or anyone else who works with animals, you may have a certain amount of medical waste from time to time. Medical waste and syringes, etc, cannot be included in recyclable goods. They will need special attention for removal and destruction. Be very selective in your choice of rubbish removals and they will be able to advise and help you with this.
