Fire wardens are officials who are responsible for coordinating fire safety and immediate responses to fires. They are experienced individuals that have completed fire warden training in their city as well as safety training depending on what kind of warden position they possess. They have distinctive responsibilities from a fire marshal who are public officials who investigate fire situations and certify buildings being safe for occupancy. The requirements for these two positions are typically different although in many small communities a fire warden can act as a marshal.

Some corporate and college campuses might have a fire warden who is the person in charge to guide people in the building to safety evacuation in the event of fire. This is most common in dormitories where one of the staff might be assigned or any student who is physically fit to commit to the task. To become a skilled fire warden in Brisbane, Australia, it is necessary to sign up and attend a fire warden training Brisbane to learn how to properly perform the job.

Fire wardens can also supervise fire safety in every town and city as well as on forest and wilderness fires. For this type of position a fire fighter training is necessary. Some of the fire wardens are drawn to volunteer in fire departments where employees are normally trained by the staff to meet their needs. Others are graduates of a firefighting program that also involves height safety training and has experienced being a firefighter before applying for a fire warden position.

Fire warden training is an essential preparation that will provide more knowledge to a warden on how to conduct fire drills or inspect fire alarms so that your organization will be well prepared in case of an actual fire. The training will also include fire preventions, how to handle emergency situations as well as learning how to use firefighting equipment such as sprinkler systems and fire extinguishers. The amount of previous experience you have undergone will determine what type of training you need. If you have done fire warden training Brisbane and worked as a safety officer you may have enough knowledge on fire prevention and may not require training. Moreover if you have experienced as a firefighting volunteer, you might have done height safety training and is equipped with knowledge in handling emergency situations so you may not get involve in training. However if you want to refresh your skills or be updated with the latest alarm systems and fire extinguishers you may attend programs that demonstrates the latest technological innovations in the fire system. And in the event that you have no idea about the field at all you may choose to attend an extensive training to be able to grasp the basic principles of fire safety.
