Homes in Marine Port Orange, TX by Daisy Culai

Article published on November 28th 2011 | Business

The shipyard Orange, TX is the main attraction in Marine Port Orange, TX, but there are some homes in the area as well. Obviously, these homes may be a little few and far between simply because Port of Orange is primarily considered to be an industrial shipping area. Nevertheless these homes are there, and they are quite beautiful in many instances between Industrial Park Orange, TX and the Shipyard.

So, who lives right next to a shipping port? All kinds of people, but to name some of the most obviousâ€¦

Shipping Professionals

People who work on shipping freighters and ships that go in and out of Marine Port Orange, TX, working maintenance on the boats or working as Sea captains or navigators or deck hands often rent or buy homes in and around the port where they can stay between trips out to sea.

Port Workers

People who work at the port itself, loading and unloading containers, managing inventory and so on often live in and around the Port so that they can stay close to their work without having to take a huge, long commute every day.

Presidents, CEOs and Business Owners

People who own or manage shipping companies may own homes around their business properties. This allows them to stay involved in their business rather than handing it over to a middle manager who, whether or not they may be trusted with the day to day duties of running the business, would likely not run it the same as the owner or operator, and would certainly take away the feeling of value that comes from running a successful business.

Sea Lovers

Some people just love the ocean, they love the smell of the salt water, of the seaweed washing up on the beach. They love seagulls flying over head and watching ships roll in and out of the port. Blue skies and white clouds, sea foam splashing at rocks and sand. An afternoon at the Port of Orange just to visit can be an incredibly relaxing experience. Waking up to that every single morning isnâ€™t a bad way to live. Certainly, many of the residents in and near Port Orange simply love the ocean and wouldnâ€™t trade it for anything. That Port of Orange is an industrial area, primarily, means that property values are actually lower than in some residential beach towns where you canâ€™t buy even a modest property for less than seven or eight figures.

Port of Orange has a lot to offer a lot of people. Itâ€™s not just shipping and handling, although that is a major piece of Port of Orangeâ€™s present, past and future. Port of Orange is also a beautiful location, rich with culture, with business, with commerce and with history. If you get a chance, just take a walk around the Port of Orange and see what you think. You may find yourself falling in love with this harbor that plays home to one of the biggest ports in the state of Texas and which boasts the unique status of being a key in turning the economy around and helping to create jobs, business and industry here in the heart of America.
