Are you the chosen one entrusted with the responsibility to organize the stag weekend? Then there is a range of things that need to be taken care of. To help you out, here are some suggestions.

Start by confirming the wedding date. Silly as it may sound, yet many of us simply end up confusing the dates. After all, a wrong date could trigger a serious mishap in preparations.

When it comes to fixing the stag weekend scheduling, our suggestion is, do not go for dates that are way ahead of the wedding day. However, a gap of two weeks between the stag party and the event would prove sufficient. There are several examples of cases where the groom simply could not make it to his wedding because the bash continued until wee hours on the day before. The groom to be is your responsibility and you certainly will not appreciate standing in front of his bride explaining things that are beyond explanations.

Once you get the schedule fixed, time to set on with the guest list. It would be wrong to expect every invitee to come for the bash. Moreover, instead of inviting people left, right, and center, asks the groom for his suggestions. It is your responsibility to ensure that the guest list for stag weekends does not get too huge. Bigger the number of people invited to the bash, more complex gets the organizing process. Apart from getting stuff like dates confirmed or preparing the list, you also need to collect money from people. Hence, do not go into many hassles. Keep it simple and grounded.

One that thing that needs to be kept in time and again while preparing the list are names of people who lose all sense after getting drunk. There is no point inviting such maniacs to an event so soulful in nature. They may end up ruining the spirit of the stag party. If the stag weekend is slated to be held at the groomâ€™s apartment, then keep a check on the probable troublemakers in the group.
