I need to Scrap My Car – what do I need to do? Mary Porter

Article published on June 22nd 2012 | Business

When your car fails its MOT and the repair bill comes to more than your car's worth, you may begin to think "shall I scrap my car?". Choosing to scrap your car can be a big decision for many but it will give you some money towards a replacement car and removes the need for you to try and sell it.

There are many businesses around with scrap my car services. As it's a very competitive market, consider contacting a few to see which can offer you the most competitive price for their scrap my car services. Often, businesses with scrap my car service will have a nationwide circle of scrap dealers which means they can offer a scrap my car service to you no matter where in the country you live. Having access to a nationwide network of scrap dealers means they will be able to get you the best possible quote. However, ensuring you shop around is still vital.

When scrapping a car, you must follow the DVLA's guidelines and take it to an authorised treatment facility. When deciding upon which business's scrap my car service to use, it's essential to make sure they are an authorised treatment centre. An authorised treatment facility's scrap my car service will dismantle your vehicle in an environmentally friendly way. They'll ensure it's fully dismantled and that none of the parts are sent to landfill. Their scrap my car service will ensure no harmful chemicals are released during the scrappage process.

Importantly, if you use a scrap my car service, the DVLA will need to be notified that your car has been scrapped. An authorised treatment facility offering scrap my car services will do this for you, giving you a Certificate of Destruction which shows that the car has been destroyed and is no longer your responsibility. If you decide to forego a scrap my car service and destroy your car yourself, you will have to declare your car off the road for tax purposes every year. The only legal way to get a Certificate of Destruction is to take your car to an authorised facility offering scrap my car services.
