Greatly influenced by the ever-changing consumer demands and preferences, the apparel industry, a key division of the textile business, is highly fragmented and competitive in India. Thanks to rapid urbanization and higher disposable incomes, the "price sensitive" Indian consumers are now becoming more brand-conscious. The growing fashion consciousness has turned women wear segment into a lucrative and highly evolving market. As per the estimate, carried out in our latest research report, the Indian women wear industry, which is worth around INR 540 Billion, will grow at a CAGR of more than 11% during 2012-2015.

Our report, "Indian Women Wear Market Forecast to 2015", estimates the current market size and presents forecasts on the basis of its in-depth study and analysis of feasible market trends, demographics, consumer behavior and spending patterns. It also studies how the markets of western wear, ethnic wear, innerwear, and fashion accessories are performing, and in which direction they are moving.
