Transportation services are a great deal for travelers who just arrived from a long flight; newlywed couples during their wedding ceremonies; or tourists who do not prefer bringing their own vehicles to their destinations. Limousines are one of the most common types of vehicles used for this service. Across the country, limo services are growing in popularity as clients are finding the idea of traveling in style appealing.

A limo is a type of luxury sedan that comes in different lengths and styles but is known for having a divider separating the driver from the rear passenger compartment. The hood of the earliest limousine models is made of a type of cloak worn by shepherds in the French region Limousin, from which the name of the vehicle is derived. The separate driver compartment allows passengers to have a more private ride.

Often the divider is made of soundproof glass to keep conversations inside the passenger compartment private. However, the window can be opened when passengers need to relay information to the driver or vice versa. Some models have a removable roof section so that passengers can enjoy natural lighting and ventilation.

Limousines are popular vehicles of prominent personalities like presidents and business executives, which explain their high purchase cost. Services that involve the use of limo for transportation like those aforementioned are expensive as well. Depending on its length, a limo can accommodate up to 12 people.

The driver of a limousine is more popularly known as a chauffeur. Although the word refers to any person paid to drive a passenger motor vehicle, it best describes the job of a limo driver. In industrialized cities like Austin, corporate travels requiring the use of Austin limos must be driven by a licensed limo driver. In some countries, a limo driver is required to obtain a driving license different from the general driver's license he initially obtained, making his job as a chauffeur a little more exclusive.

Compared to taxis and cabs, hiring a limo Austin travelers prefer for transportation services requires advance booking. Airport limousines, for example, must be hired prior to the flight to avoid overlapping of services and because the passenger won't be able to hire one on the spot. The same is true when hiring a limo for wedding ceremonies.
