Like any other nation, financial services products in India are quite sought after to care of the millions of the middle class communityâ€™s savings. Indian markets also have the debts to absorb any kind of liquidity flown in the market here. If we try to compare and contrast between the Indian financial services markets with that of any other developed nationâ€™s especially U.S, the differences and similarities can be very easily spotted. Like any other country, Indians practice many unscrupulous practices in terms of involving into financial services. Most of the time the citizens donâ€™t even know the purpose of their investment in a particular tool; leave apart the notion of understanding its features.

As there are so many similarities, India does stand alone from the other countries in terms of some contrasting features. India has millions of people who donâ€™t even possess a bank account, nor they earn enough to maintain an account or to start saving. Rest of the part of the country, who may be understood as more aware, have least interest in the equity financing part. They are more involved in the more traditional ways of managing their savings and finances. These may include, fixed deposits, debts etc... India also does not have structured products. They are coming into picture, but as of yet, it is a dream, far to be reached.

In India people view the insurance plans as a saving tool, and not as a protection tool. When it comes to tax savings, or a long term saving, people look up for the insurance as amongst the best plans for savings in India. Service tax is an important issue which every Indian employee deals with a lot of care, and if not care, then at least with attention. The service tax registration, its calculation and payments, these facts fill up the pockets of thousands of agents in India. And it is a good sign, that at least for tax related issues, people seek the help of a financial agent or an advisor. So that it may eventually lead them to seek the financial help from the professionals for any financial matter. Be it loan arrangements, equity financing or any other savings and investments for the good.

India has a population more than one billion, with more the 150, 00,000 children. This shows the huge prospect that this developing nation has in all the sectors including Finances. Therefore in order to remain resilient and keep up with the pace of the world market, Indian financial services industries have started to outsource financial services and products. The companies have started to emerge as global players in terms of providing their financial products and services. These products and services are also sold outside India, in order to make a mark in the global market. For this the need for outsourcing the financial services has increased immensely. The companies thus are also involved in inventing and advertising products which are suitable for the citizens in India, as well as in other countries where the companyâ€™s market has explored.
