Are you going to retire? Are you too much worried about your disabled condition or how to continue living for the rest of the life? The US government has made your life easy after retirement or if someone becomes handicapped. The Social Security Act was passed and formulated by Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1935, which comprises all the social welfare regulations and programs and social health insurance programs. It includes social security disability programs.

The programs consist of the Federal Retirement schemes and services, insurance for the disabled, advantages of the unemployed people, help for the needy families, medical assistance to the disabled, health insurance for the children, etc. The capital for these facilities and programs comes from the paycheck of a worker every month. It provides different social security disability benefits which are necessary for a disabled person.

Qualifications for Social Security Disability benefits

The Social Security Administration or SSA has set up certain rules and requirements that a person must meet in order to get the benefits for social security disability. These are mentioned below-

The concerned person must have enough evidence of his permanent disability. He should also show that he has been disabled for a long duration or his disability is expected to last one more year. Then only he is eligible to get the benefits.

Secondly, when the person applies for social security disability benefits, he needs to have his medical records ready and updated. Then only SSA will decide upon his claim, whether it is legitimate or not and whether he will receive the benefits.

Thirdly, when you claim for the disability, it stops you to perform your daily tasks; you cannot apply for a job and go ahead with your education.

Finally, you should submit an application to the office of the Social Security. You can do it individually, through the internet or through phone.

If you submit the documents properly, social security disability will give you response after five months and you will know whether you are qualified for it or denied. As soon as you are approved, you will begin getting payments. If the process takes a long time than what is expected, you will get a back pay. If you donâ€™t get the social security disability benefits and your claim is rejected, you can appeal for it and start the process within sixty days. It will enter the reconsideration stage and if it is again rejected you can appeal to the judge of the administrative law. Finally it will get solved.
