More Revelations About the Esources Scam by Brad Smith

Article published on February 7th 2012 | Business

News about an esources scam has been making the rounds on the Internet for quite some time now. According to these rumors, the esources website is a fraudulent one designed to separate dropshippers from their money. To some extent, these rumors have succeeded in making new dropshippers wary about trusting the website. However, it is a different matter when it comes to experienced retailers who know the industry inside out. Read on to learn more.

Successful retailers understand that it is impossible to set up and run a dropshipping business without the information and guidance provided by reliable trade directories such as the esources portal. This website helps retailers locate the best wholesale companies without needing to spend months researching each of them. And, because the information available on this website has always helped retailers build the best connections and achieve the best deals, experienced resellers fully trust this amazing portal and advise newcomers to simply brush aside those rumors about an esources scam.

Empowering You With Whatâ€™s What in Dropshipping

Trade directories, dropship review sites, and forums offer lots of valuable information on all aspects of the dropshipping industry. The esources website too is a rich source of reliable and accurate information for retailers and wholesalers. This one fact is actually more than enough to uncover the fake nature of esources scams. However, new retailers can still be confused about the authenticity of the website due to those rumors about an esources scam. To prove the honest motives of the website, let us see how the esources website and another fraudulent website describe the term free dropshipper.

The fraudulent website explains free dropshipper as one who offers free shipping services. But, is it true? No. According to the esources website, the term free dropshipper refers to a wholesale company that does not charge a fee to access its product range. The company will, however, collect shipping charges. Among wholesalers, there are many companies that charge special fees to grant you access to their product ranges. The charges vary from one supplier to another and may be calculated on an annual or monthly basis. Such charges can add to the expenses of retailers and considerably bring down income. Experts in the industry agree that the explanation given by the esources website is indeed the accurate one. This again proves that the website is fully trustworthy, and you need not pay heed to news about any esources scam.

If you are new to online marketing, you may have no idea which supplier to choose from among the thousands out there. There are local, national, and international wholesalers dealing in as astounding array of products ranging from books, toys, and apparel to electronics, cosmetics, and fashion accessories. It is simply impossible to be sure which suppliers are reliable and legitimate. This is where the role of the esources website gains significance. By listing the most accurate, verified, and updated information on wholesalers, this website brushes aside the rumors on any esources scam and helps you make it big in dropshipping.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/business-articles/more-revelations-about-the-esources-scam.htm - Article Side

Brad Smith - About Author:
Reports on an a esources scam can confuse new dropshippers. Remember that Esources.co.uk is a reliable resource for retailers and that a esources scams have simply been fabricated by fraudulent companies.

Article Keywords:
esources scam, esources scams, esources

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!