After sunset, when it gets dark everywhere around us, the outdoor lantern comes up as a new source of illumination, lighting up our surroundings and make everything around us look pleasant and elegant. These are mostly used outdoors and create a nice scenario on being placed around our residences. They commonly light up gardens, backyards and open spaces in the vicinity of our houses. Nature lovers can also spend hours under the sky with the help of one of such lanterns.

Security is by default one of the prime considerations during the nights. There is always a great chance of thefts, burglaries and other possible mishaps during the nights. Therefore, proper care needs to be taken to ensure that the surroundings are lightened up to minimize the chances of possible mishaps.

Outdoor lanterns can enhance the security level significantly, as it will be much difficult for the intruders to break in under lights. Nowadays, people are coming up with even better security systems with upgraded features. In many complexes, security cameras are placed in tandem with the lamps and the combination of the two connected to the central security system. Therefore, anyone who breaks in will not only be tracked but the identities of the culprit will also be revealed with ease.

The outdoor lanterns can be both electrically powered and solar powered depending on the mode of use and requirements of the users. The only difference is the fact that in case of solar powered lamps, the electricity consumption is almost nil whereas the electrical powered ones will consume a fair amount of electricity which will increase the overall expenses for the users. However, solar lamps are much less intense compared to the electrical ones and therefore not suitable to be used in places with a large open space.
