Patio Furniture-Things to consider by Blossom Dana

Article published on December 13th 2011 | Business

Patio furniture is a specific type of furniture, designed exclusively for outdoor use. Since it has to stay outdoors most of the time, it is important that it should be typically made up of weather resistant materials. Garden furniture generally includes a set of a table and four or six chairs and a parasol. Further it may also consist of a picnic table, long chairs, etc. Outdoor furniture can be either movable or centered. There are also patio heaters which people use when they want to enjoy cold weather naturally. Even these could be either permanently mounted or portable. They can operate on electricity, propane, bottled butane or natural gas. The commonly used materials to build up patio furniture are plastic, wood, teak, aluminum, wicker, and wrought iron. Since garden furniture has to suffer a lot of exposure to outside climatic conditions such as scorching sun heat, wind, rain etc, it is important to choose the correct material according to our requirement and budget.

Various kinds of Patio furniture:

Wood patio furniture gets easily affected by elements such as water, fire, acids etc. So it needs to be periodically treated. Aluminum garden furniture is robust and long lasting. It does not need much manual care but in case protected coating gets removed, it will quickly corrode, which then renders it no more attractive. Plastic garden furniture is naturally waterproof, so it could be left outdoors in all seasons. Modern wicker garden furniture is made from synthetic resin. It has high life expectancy and low manufacturing cost. Nowadays, one important venture is Resin garden furniture. It is made up of recycled plastic. It is eco -friendly and is incredibly durable. And it may provide up to 20 years warranty. And it can be molded to resemble real wood or wicker. Even then, the most preferred material for outdoor furniture is teak. Teak contains silica, thereby making it resistant to fungal decay, swelling and warping, as well as chemicals, fire, acids and alkalis.

Factors to be considered while making a choice:

While choosing the outdoor garden furniture, it must also be considered that the furniture must be perfect to be used on a daily basis and could withstand any and all weather conditions. The outdoor furniture must be chosen so as to add a unique feel to any garden. Comfort is no doubt the most required thing. Investment should be made in such a way that furniture lasts for years. Moreover your patio set should be such that it makes our patio area a favorite area of our home and where gatherings with friends and family could be enjoyed. Sturdy and weather resistant furniture is definitely a compliment for any garden or patio area. Correctly chosen patio furniture will make your garden feel like paradise.
