Alcohol has become an important part of the business of modern day hotels and restaurants; with an increasing number of these establishments, serving all kinds of liquor and cocktails there is a need for supervision and verification of their credentials before giving them a permit like Personal Licence. This is a legal formality or a permission that allows a commercial establishment to sell or serve alcohol in its name.

About Personal Licence Training

Personal Licence training is a program in which individuals are acquainted about alcohol and the laws pertaining to it. This training is imparted by lawyers and solicitors to trainees and they also make them aware of the nuances involved in selling alcohol and alcoholic beverages.

For those who are interested in a business or professional engagement with the supply or serving of alcohol Personal Licence courses can prove to be beneficial. There are those who come here because they are interested in starting their business; apart from them there are those who will be professionally engaged in the same industry or division of employment because of which they find the course helpful.

Another important reason that Personal Licence Courses are popular is the ease and convenience with which the NCPLH or National Certificate for Personal Licence Holder can be acquired; candidates will be more confident in appearing for the examination and the interviews.

The Personal Licence Training is available as a course through three options. The first is a direct classroom interaction program; the second is a distance learning course while the third is an e-learning program. In case of the third option similarities exist with the classroom program as there are interactive sessions available in this program as it is carried through the computer where students and instructors are connected through the internet.

In the UK, Scotland and Wales the Personal Licence training programs are a mandatory part of application process for the license.
