Dubai opened its doors to the world in 1966 after the discovery of oil which led to an influx of jobs. People from surrounding nations began migrating towards the Middle East because of the economic boom which continued to grow. The 'oil economy' as most would refer to it created thousands of opportunities and pushed Dubai and the Middle East into the modern era.

As the modern economy of Dubai continues to grow, more multinationals have set up base in this city creating even more jobs which is why Dubai's population today consists more of immigrants than that of people who were originally from the country. This also led to a real-estate boom with rates that are high even according to world standards.

With Dubai now on the world map, the price of real-estate never seems to settle which poses a problem for people who move into Dubai. This has a downside for those who have just moved into Dubai for the first time as they need more space to settle down and set up their home. When people migrate from one country to another for better opportunities, they usually take their families along with them. This is where space and rentals come into the picture. Those who move in with their families also bring in a lot of luggage and furniture which finds a cozy space in one corner of the apartment.
