PR stands for Public Relations. It can be defined as strategy to develop strong positive relationship between an organization and its targeted audiences. A pr company is responsible for helping out client organizations to develop a goodwill relationship with consumers.

pr agencies involve assessing and supervising public attitudes, while maintaining a positive understanding and mutual relationship between public and organization. A PR executive will improve communication procedure between the two parties. In the process, several newer strategies will be implemented. The executive needs to be clear on his/her approach. Communication should be proper and to the point. Language jargons are not required by any means. Presentation should be in such a manner which will allow both the parties to understand without any difficulty.

PR agencies effectively help in the following departments:

Marketing the brand name of client organization before a targeted set of customers

Conveying information about latest products and services to customers

Reaching local government & legislators for maintaining a goodwill relation

Maintaining a goodwill relation with politician for additional support and brand image

Public Relations is a promising career option. There is enormous growth opportunity for employees. However, a person needs to be strong in communication skills to grab the job. Expertise is required in both verbal and written communication skills. The candidate needs to have a street smart as well positive attitude. He/she should be ready to face challenges. A MBA degree holder can find it much easier to grab the job of a PR professional. However, big PR agencies always look for candidates with suitable years of experience under their belt. So, for fresher candidates it is recommended to go for smaller firms and corporates.
