Prospecting Equipment That You Will Need for Gold Mining by Julia Roger

Article published on January 30th 2012 | Business

When it comes to gold mining, there are different types of prospecting equipment you would need depending upon the process you employ.. For example, in the panning process, you need a pan to separate gravel from the gold but there could be complicated processes to collect gold from some mines. That is where mining gold equipment is important. You will need equipment such as picks, shovels, trowels and hand dredges, all of which can be picked up online at great prices.

A variety of other prospecting equipment like metal detectors, micro sluice gold concentrators, black sand magnets and gold magnets, high bankers and power sluices will be useful at different stages of gold extraction too. The size of dredge varies from portable dredges measuring just 2 inches to commercial models which could be measuring around 8 inches. There are suction dredge models that you can pick and choose from as well. Another important piece of equipment apart from gold pan kits includes gold cube black sand concentrator.

You will also need dry washers, spiral planners and pro gold trammels.. The high banker is a particularly important piece of equipment which is actually a sluice box mounted on 4 legs, with a hopper and sloping rods. These help in filtering out the larger stones from the gold. There are special spray bars installed in the hopper which send jets of water on to the gravel to help classify materials of different densities on the tray. One of the biggest advantages offered by the high banker is the fact that you can filter out more material with it as compared to a normal sluice box.
