Roger Hamilton and Nature as the Spine of Wealth Creation by Corwin Smith

Article published on January 10th 2012 | Business

One of the finest things about any system or a principle that is discovered or searched out from the womb of nature is that more often than not it provides an opportunity to the coming generations to improvise on it. But the world of economics or to put it in other words the current system of wealth creation that had been prevalent in the world and had been in control of almost all the financial operations in the world had so much scope of improvement for the people who had been analyzing it periodically and yet they did not found anything wrong with the system. And all that they kept on doing is injecting some vitality in it every time there was a downturn in the economy. But one social entrepreneur called Roger Hamilton really proved that the real vitality that the system of wealth creation needed was never ever given a thought about and thus never really put into action.

But then the question that arose was what exactly was the vitality that was missing in the present system of economics, the onus of finding the solution to the problem once again was accepted byRoger James Hamilton. and it would not be an exaggeration to say that he was absolutely the right person who could have unearthed that vitality. Roger himself was a part of the system and really put everything that he had in his efforts to become a successful entrepreneur while at the same time not dithering a step away from the rules, regulations as well as the norms and dictums of the existing system of economics. It was really important for him to have an anchor in his professional life, a spine that would keep him going and lead him to the goals that he wanted to achieve in his life.

But the very spine of his was missing the vitality and the result was the endless wait for one sign of positive outcome that never really happened. And thus he embarked on the mission to find the real vital force that would put life into the craft of wealth creation. And after an in depth analysis and research he found that that vitality was the Nature itself. And Roger Hamilton. immediately put into action a system of wealth creation that had as its backbone the uninterrupted flow of nature. And that led him to success and prosperity. But he did not stop there. He captured the findings in the set of theories so that the rest of the people can benefit from it.
