Disabled

The SSI disability is designed to help aged and blind people. It provides cash for basic needs like food, clothing and shelter.

Information on SSI Benefits

Individuals who receive monthly SSI get a certain amount of money. Disabled couple receives more than that amount.

When determining a married person's SSI eligibility the Administration includes the resource and income of their non-disabled spouse.

If any individual or disabled couples live in another person's house then the income is reduced by one-third. Because that individual or the couple is receiving the basic needs which is food, shelter and clothing. Individuals who live in halfway houses do not qualify for the SSI benefits.

But individual or couples who live in an emergency homeless shelter can easily qualify for SSI benefits but only for six month during their nine month period.

A person who receives SSI benefits automatically qualifies for Medicare.

If you are having any queries then you can contact with any of the social security disability attorney.

How to check your SSI disability Status

You can check your SSI status by contacting with local offices. They would assign a caseworker who will work with you and assist you with your current SSI status. But there are ways to check your SSI status.

Navigate to the office and input your Zip code to mark the nearest Social Security office.

Make a call to the security office. Give your name and case number. You can ask for your status update on SSI claim. Ask for the phone number of Disability Determination Services.

Visit the office and request for your caseworker. If he is not available then ask the receptionist for your status update who will then assign someone else to look into the matter.

If this fails then call Disability Determination Services. Give the caseworker your name, address and social security number. She will then give you your status update.
