Simple Tips to extend the life of your car by Nicolevickers

Article published on April 14th 2012 | Business

Your car is a valuable asset, and itâ€™s your responsibility to take care of it to make sure it doesnâ€™t depreciate too badly. A well-maintained car is the product of a cautious owner. If youâ€™re not too careful and are always taking your car for granted, it will lose its value due to severe damage and lack of maintenance. This will eventually cause you tons of cash for repairs and remodeling.

Proper car maintenance involves hard work and perseverance. In order for your car to function well, you have to treat it properly. Remember: your car will be your ultimate companion during road trips and fun vacations. Here are some simple tips on how you can prolong the life of your baby:

Give Your Car a Break

As recommended by most car manufacturer, it is important to give your car a break every 1,000 miles (1,600 km) and keep your speed under 55mph. A car needs rest, especially if itâ€™s been working for 6 hours straight. You also have to avoid placing heavy loads more than your car can handle, as it will result into denting and paint jobs (not to mention potentially damaging the suspension).

Choose only Trusted Service Stations

Whether you get a brand new or secondhand car from any of the trusted auto dealerships in Indianapolis, itâ€™s important to look for service station where you can bring your car for an overhaul. Some service stations offer cheap gases that arenâ€™t even properly filtered. Filling your car with dirty and cheap gasoline can cause severe damage to its engine and can shorten its life span. Stick to a service station you know in case your car starts acting up.

Drive with Caution Everyday

Drivers should treat cars purchased in Indianapolis auto dealerships with care, even while on the road. Unless youâ€™re into street racing, thereâ€™s no need for you to rev up the engine during start up; fact, it can even do more harm than good. The engine is the lifeblood of the car, and putting less strain on it while driving will prolong its life interval and reward you with great performance.

Proper Maintenance during long-term storage

Youâ€™ve been utilizing your car that you bought from one of the trusted car dealers Indianapolis Indiana for over a year now, and you finally decided to give it a break for a month. Parking it in a shaded area is a must, and disengaging all the car mechanisms (parking break, battery) must be done properly to prevent unnecessary damage.
