Stop Tree Removal Tactics from Central Coast of California by Julia Roger

Article published on April 26th 2012 | Business

Trees are important to maintain the ecological balance of this earth. However, we, humans, do not try to understand this concept. We always try to see our own monetary benefits. And as a result, more and more trees are chopped down. The wood is used for a lot of purpose. It is used for manufacturing paper, match stick, furniture items, and lot more of human usable things. In the last decade or so, tree lopping central coast has taken place for commercial and residential land purpose.

There were several green spaces available within this region of California. However, the recent years have experienced more of concrete structures being evolved while eliminating those green spaces. People are looking for their own profits. More and more promoters have come up with newer land projects. Sanctioning vacant green lands is not a problem where bribes and back hand monetary dealings are a must to achieve some success.

With such increase of tree removal central coast, the environment has been affected severely. The effects can be clearly seen in the form of global warming which has started to take place in most parts of the world. Central Coast in California used to be a region with wonderful atmospheric condition. The temperature used to be warm and mild but not hotter. Rainfall was in a balanced form.

However, chopping down trees has resulted in unnecessary hot summer most time of the year. Rainfalls have dried out while winter season does not stay for long. Although, government is trying to reduce the lopping of trees in this part of America, but it cannot be said that success is fully achieved. More and more trees have started to get planted. But, it is us, who should responsibly handle this issue in a proper manner. After all, the earth is ours. It is our responsibility to save it.
