Article published on November 25th 2011 | Business

When talking with a divorce attorney, Northfield, NJ itâ€™s important to understand the notion of confidentiality, and exactly what confidentiality means. In short, it basically means that you are legally allowed to be completely honest when dealing with family law, Northfield, NJ.

Here are the main points you need to know about confidentiality with your divorce attorney, Northfield, NJ.

It is legally binding

Your lawyer is not legally allowed to discuss private details with outside parties

The sole exception is if you threaten to commit a crime in the future

An attorney is not there to judge you. Itâ€™s simply accepted that not everybody is completely honest with their spouse, especially not when couples get divorced. Your attorney is not going to look down upon you for, say, having an affair, if you have some money that youâ€™ve kept secret from your husband or if you have suspicions that your child may not be yours.

No matter what you tell your attorney, they are obligated to keep it a secret. Throughout the course of your trial, they are the one person who you can be completely honest with. Sometimes, neglecting to share the whole truth with someone close to you seems to make sense. With an attorney, telling the whole truth has absolutely no negative consequence for you, and thereâ€™s literally no reason whatsoever to keep anything from them.

Building a Case

Courtroom strategy with your divorce attorney, Northfield, NJ, in fact, demands complete honesty on your part between yourself and your attorney. If you want them to give you the very best defense you can possibly get from them, then they need every detail. The more information they have on the marriage, on your finances, on your situation, the more ammunition they have to build a case with, the more options they have in developing a courtroom strategy.

It is in your best interest not to be shy about anything at all when talking with your attorney. When briefing them on the situation, just bear in mind the term â€œNo Holds Barred.â€• Anything that took place in the marriage, anything thatâ€™s taking place in your life right now, it is in your best interests to tell them exactly what is going on, sparing no details.

Why Trust Your Attorney So Completely?

Your lawyer has your best interests in mind. Itâ€™s not just that they have a professional duty to you, rather, they have a duty to themselves and their own reputation, as well. If they donâ€™t get you a good deal, then their reputation takes a hit, their client base takes a hit. If you present them with a simple case of dividing up the assets and they wind you up with only a 25% share in the business you founded, then your attorneyâ€™s reputation might never recover.

It doesnâ€™t make sense for an attorney to ever want to use any information you give them against you, so donâ€™t hold back anything at all. Share every last detail with them, however embarrassing or incriminating. Let them know the score and they can help you change it.
