Article published on April 19th 2012 | Business

Humans are social animals and are trained from birth to act in ways accepted by the culture and society they move in. Thus, most people react differently to those who display behavior that is contrary to social norms. What needs to be understood though is that one cause of this behavior is Aspergerâ€™s syndrome.

Doctors classify Aspergerâ€™s syndrome as an autistic spectrum disorder. Sufferers of this syndrome are known as â€œaspiesâ€•. Aspies are characterized by social awkwardness and a very strong interest in certain topics. Not everyone who has these two characteristics can be considered an aspie; the presence of the syndrome is suspected when those characteristics significantly interfere with the way that person relates with others.

The causes and risk factors of Aspergerâ€™s syndrome are not fully understood yet. Genes, changes in brain structure, and some childhood vaccines were linked to the syndrome. In addition, boys seem to have a higher risk of developing Aspergerâ€™s than girls. Thereâ€™s no known cure for aspies yet.

This doesnâ€™t mean that a child with Aspergerâ€™s syndrome should be impaired by this disorder. The child can be brought to a doctor. Before setting up an appointment with the doctor, the parent can observe the behavioral patterns of the child for a certain period to determine if the child is really an aspie. The parent can also refer the child to a therapeutic school.

Therapeutic schools offer educational programs designed to meet the learning needs of people with learning disabilities, as well as people who have behavioral and emotional problems. These schools are usually supervised by mental health professionals. Therapeutic schools offer services like counseling and rehabilitation in addition to academic classes. Students who have disorders like Aspergerâ€™s syndrome can benefit from these schools.

In the United States, therapeutic schools can be found on the website of the National Association of Therapeutic Schools and Programs (NATSAP). The determination of the right therapeutic school for a child is very important. This is to ensure that needs are met and that the condition is not aggravated by ignorance of the syndrome.

Therefore, the parent can send the child to an Aspergers school. To check whether the school can adequately serve the needs of a young aspie, the parents can look at the academic curriculum and extracurricular activities provided by the school. Itâ€™s possible for aspies to have the condition for the rest of their lives and still have a normal, happy, and healthy life. For more information on selecting the right therapeutic school for a child, check the article at education.com/reference/article/Ref_Selecting_Program/?page=2.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/business-articles/therapeutic-schools-for-those-with-asperger-s-syndrome.htm - Article Side

Carolin Newmeyer - About Author:
For more details, search a Therapeutic schools,a therapeutic school and a Aspergers school in Google for related information.

Article Keywords:
aspergers school, therapeutic school, therapeutic schools

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!