As road trippers head out into the â€œgreat wide openâ€• to explore a bit of the countryside, they will often employ the use of a tow bar package to bring either another vehicle, a boat, or a storage trailer along with them. However, in doing so, they often encounter a number of things that they wish they had included in the installation process. Towbars are one of the ultimate travel accessories, but accessorizing equipment can be just as important as making the decision to implement a towing packing in the first place! Letâ€™s take a brief look at some of the accessories you may want to consider adding to your tow bar before setting out on another long road trip â€“ after all, itâ€™ll be far too late once youâ€™re out in the middle of nowhere, right?

Electric Brake Units

Electric brake units can really help you retain control of your towing situation when travelling on freeways or open roads. Because sudden stops are always a part of the journey, consider implementing the use of one of these handy devices. Some will proportionally apply the brakes on your trailer to ensure that the braking is smooth and eliminate much of the sway that can occur. Other units will operate on a time delay to essentially meet the same end.

Transmission Coolers

This important accessory doesnâ€™t involve your trailer as much as it involves the tow vehicle itself. As we see our driving preferences move toward more efficient vehicles, our engines and transmissions must work much harder to get the job doneâ€¦especially if you are travelling uphill. A transmission cooler will basically assist your radiator in the cooling of your engine and transmission, helping to reduce much of the friction or stress involved in the towing process. If you are having a tow bar installed, it is worthwhile to at least consider having one of these handy accessories installed, as well.

Electronics Plugs

Many towbars have lighting plugs included in the design, but in case the models you select do not, remember that staying compliant with vehicle laws is very important! What good are the brake lights on the back of your tow vehicle if the cars behind you cannot see them? Be sure that the lights on your trailer are fully functional. In many cases, adapters will be needed, and most Brisbane towbar providers will have them on hand and ready for installation.

Bicycle Racks

Bicycle racks are a handy accessory when you are traveling to remote locations. After all, a nice bike ride into town can be just what you need to clear your head and get some fresh air while on vacation, right? Fitting directly onto the back of your tow vehicle, bike racks can be installed to fit easily into your tow bar design, ensuring that the bicycles are completely stable while in transit. If youâ€™re the outdoorsy type, consider bicycle racks to be the perfect supplement to your tow bar.

Travelling across the country can be a great time, and when you have the proper equipment to ensure safety and convenience, you can focus on the purpose of your trip â€“ having fun. If you are considering a drive into the Outback and looking for a tow bar, Brisbane boasts some of the best providers in the world. Always remember to inquire about the accessories that we have mentioned here, and you will have the ability to protect your vehicleâ€™s engine, the items that you are towing, and of course, other drivers on the road. When you reach your destination, youâ€™ll have everything you need to enjoy your trip without cluttering your tow vehicle. Have fun!
