Used Cherry Pickers are the right choice for many firms by Mary Porter

Article published on June 17th 2012 | Business

Working at height is an essential part of the job for many construction workers. Making sure construction workers are safe and protected while working up high is essential. Recent years have seen tough laws put in place to ensure the safety of workers while they are up high. Using suitable equipment is one such law and cherry pickers, a form of hydraulic lift with an ariel work surface, are one of the essential items. Cherry pickers are expensive and many firms choose to buy used cherry pickers. Used cherry pickers come at a fraction of the cost of new ones and can be a life-saver for many firms in todayâ€™s tough economic climate. Used cherry pickers help to keep your workers safe and at the same time, protect your back pocket.

Thereâ€™s a huge range of jobs which may require used cherry pickers. Used cherry pickers are ideal for telephone cabling work, whether the cables need servicing or repairing. Many firms also find used cherry pickers perfect for routine maintenance and repair work, especially painting soffits and fascias on high rise blocks of flats, roof repairs on tall buildings and replacing windows on higher levels. Used cherry pickers may also be used for guttering and pointing work, as well as window cleaning on high levels and replacing TV and radio ariels.

When choosing which used cherry pickers to purchase, youâ€™ll need to think about the type of cherry picker you need. Important things to consider when choosing your used cherry pickers are the size of the portable work area and how high the cherry picker is required to reach. Assessing the height of the building, and the likely height of future buildings, is essential before you commit to buying used cherry pickers. Youâ€™ll also need to consider the weight bearing load of the used cherry pickers before you purchase one.
