Article Side

Using Reverse Online Directories to Trace Lost Contacts by Johnny

Article published on July 6th 2012 | Business

If you are looking for someone and you are not sure where to start, the directory can come in very handy. There are different kinds of directories, both physical and online and they have their different uses. When you use a directory to search for someone, you can get specific details on the person including the name, phone number, physical address and even email. Online directories have become very common with people who are trying to trace long lost friends.

If a certain number has been appearing on your phone and you have no idea who has been trying to call you, you can use a reverse directory to get your answer. If someone has been stalking you, or calling your number and hanging up without saying anything, you can use the same service to track them down. The reverse directory has become very popular even with people trying to find out whom their spouses have been communicating with behind their backs.

Many people today have unlisted numbers and only those who have personal contact with them can get these numbers. While this is a way to maintain privacy, it also makes it very difficult to contact someone when you really need to reach him or her. Sometimes an emergency comes up when you really need to contact someone. In the past, all you needed to do was to pick up the phone directory and you would find the number of the person you are looking for.

Phone companies have listings of their customers but many individuals ask the companies not to list their numbers. Celebrities and other high profile individuals do not get their numbers listed on directories as a way to protect their privacy. Some online sites charge a nominal fee for the service of tracking down contacts, while others are free. The popularity of the sites has led to new ones being introduced every day.

When you need to use an online lookup service, you should carry out research to ensure that the service you are using is reputable. Some of the sites do not deliver on their promises and it is important to read reviews so that you can find out the best sites to use. It is important to note that trying to trace a cell phone number can be almost impossible. If the person calling you has been using a cell phone, the reverse phone directories may not work.

While there are free lookup services, most people recommend using the paid ones. They are often more reliable and in any case the fee they charge is very low. The legitimate sites will charge for the service but they always produce reliable results. Some of the popular sites also offer membership options where people can carry out unlimited searches every year. If you really need to find someone, the directories are ideal. If you are planning a reunion and you have lost touch with most people on your list, you can use the directories to find them.

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/business-articles/using-reverse-online-directories-to-trace-lost-contacts.htm - Article Side

Johnny - About Author:
An online a directory has more advantages than you think they are. Learn more about them by clicking to a this site!

Article Keywords:
vendim, appointments, reservation, business

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!