Want a good painting company in Orlando? Hereâ€™s what to look for and how to find one by Daniel Painting Service

Article published on May 25th 2012 | Business

Whether youâ€™re painting your houseâ€™s exterior or giving the interior a new look, a professional painting company can be a real asset. Everyone has different preferences and requirements, from schedule to price and payment methods, and it can be difficult to find a contractor who meets your needs.

The good news is that there are hundreds of painting companies in Orlando, so chances are youâ€™ll find one that will be a perfect fit. The challenge is sorting out the good ones from the bad.

Good residential painters will help you choose colours that complement your home based on your lifestyle, personal preference and the lighting in a particular space. Theyâ€™ll also put time and effort into carefully preparing the painting area, removing old paint and cleaning the walls, as well as mending cracks to create an even surface.

Bad painters deliver a shoddy job that doesnâ€™t last, but they arenâ€™t always easy to spot. They wonâ necessarily fit the â€˜cartoon baddieâ€™ profile either. Itâ€™s more likely that they will cut corners â€“ neg clean an area properly, for example, or not waiting long enough between applying coats of paint.

Attention to detail is what sets the good contractors apart from the bad. This should be apparent right from the start â€“ if your contractor presents you with a detailed quote, for example, and takes the time to go through it with you, itâ€™s likely that the physical job they do will be of a high standard.

Another tell-tale sign is references. A good contractor will be happy to provide references from previous clients when asked, and not just two or three. Many established Orlando-based painting services are happy to offer dozens of testimonials.

Websites are a handy source of information too. A well-presented website may not be a guarantee that the person who owns it can paint, but it does mean they have put thought and effort into how their business is perceived.

Finally, itâ€™s a great idea to meet a painting contractor face to face. This will give you the chance to ask any questions you might have, and to get a feel for the way this particular contractor works. When allâ€™s said and done, your gut instinct is a good indicator of whether you want to work with someone or not.
