Working & Activation Indian SIM Card by Julia Roger

Article published on March 9th 2012 | Business

In the modern world, communication has become an essential task. With the increase in communication, the increasing demands for mobile phones have hit the market. Every person keeps at least one mobile because it is very convenient source of communication. A SIM card holds the whole working of any mobile phone Indian market offers you a great range of SIM cards offered by different network operator. Here are few guidelines that will help you in knowing how to buy an Indian SIM card and make it functional.

First of all, you have to survey the kinds of offers, tariff plans, internet usability, free SMS facilities that every network operator provides. Once you finalize the network that wish to use, you then have to decide whether you want a prepaid connection or a post-paid connection. Prepaid connection requires you to recharge your mobile with certain amount whereas post-connection bills you at the end of every month. Pre-paid connections can be recharged from anywhere. The third point that is crucial while buying a SIM card is that always buy a SIM card in the state that you belong to or where you spend most of your time. This will help you in reducing your roaming charges.

When you finalize the network operator and the kind of connection that you want, go to the retail stores. You will be provided wide options to choose the number of your choice. Some companies charge you the SIM fee while other companies give the SIM card absolutely free. This means that you only have to pay the activation charges. After you select the number, you will be given form that comes along with an India SIM card. The form requires you to fill information like your name, address, etc. and you have to submit photocopies of your identity proof, address proof, and passport size photograph. Once everything is submitted, the verification would be done by the service provider and your Indian SIM card would be activated.
