IBPS Recruitment is one of the mediums which can fulfill your dream to be a banker. In the past, it was conducted by public sector banks, but it broadened its scope to Regional Rural Banks recently. IBPS recruitment 2013 will be held through a common paper based examination, different for officers and clerks. There are mostly all the public sector banks which participate in the IBPS recruitment except State Bank of India. The results of IBPS recruitment 2013, therefore, will be applicable for all the public sector banks except State Bank of India.

With the advancement of technology and internet, IBPS exam 2013 comes with an opportunity for applicants to apply online. Aspiring applicants can apply on the official site of Institute of Banking Personnel Selection (IBPS). This method becomes easier for outstation students. Moreover, this also happens to save a considerable amount of their time. There are few things which an applicant should be ready with before filling an IBPS application form. The student should have complete knowledge about IBPS exam 2013 and the related procedures before proceeding to fill the application form. The candidate's signature and photograph is a compulsory thing so it should be scanned before s/he fills the online application form. The student should have an email id on which s/he can check his/her acknowledgement letter. There are various other things that the students require. They should fill the valid details of bank to meet the application fees. After the complete process of filling the form, you receive a valid registration ID with a password for personal use. You can know the status of your application and other details of the exam by logging in with the use of this Registration ID and password.

Once you receive your admit card for the IBPS exam, you can sit for the exam in the mentioned exam centre. IBPS exam tests your knowledge in two different ways, that is, objective type paper and descriptive type papers. However, this is not the case with all the exams. Total marks which a candidate can score are 250. But be wise and careful while selecting your answers as there is a negative mark of 0.25 for every wrong answer. You can exercise and test your knowledge through sample papers and mock tests. However, what you also need to be careful about is that this test format is for the clerks' exam. The exam and scoring pattern for Probationary Officers and Specialist Officers will vary.

After the exam, you can find your IBPS Result 2013 on the official website of IBPS. If you have passed the exam, you will receive your result via post. So, you should mention your valid address in the application form. You can apply to all public sector banks and other nationalized banks for a year on the basis of this scorecard.

Keeping in mind the complete procedure, you can check the latest updates on the website for more on IBPS exams. If there are any changes, you can keep yourself updated by being active on the website.
