Are you looking for an edge that few, if any, of your competitors for a certain job possess? Are you the type who wants to have a distinctive skills sets, personality and capacity that will make you stand over and above your colleagues? Are you trying to find yet failing to identify your niche in the job market? If you answered â€œyesâ€• to one of these questions, then you will appreciate career services as provided by professional career counselors.

Who Will Need

In fact, no matter what stage of your career you are in, you will require professional career counseling for the simple matter that career management is a lifelong, continuing process. Starting a career on the right foot, shifting from one career to the next, and improving a current career path â€“ all require professional career services from the right people.

Career counseling professionals identify 4 types of individuals who seek career management services. The proper identification as to which category an individual belongs to will lead to the proper identification of the steps to take in career management.

These categories are briefly described as:

â€¢ Exploratory individuals are usually just entering the workforce or who are new to a certain occupation.

â€¢ Transitory individuals are in the process of making changes in their career paths; or are mastering their early to mid-level tasks in their careers; or are floundering in their careers; or are transitioning from one career to the next.

â€¢ Mid-life career individuals have already acquired a desired degree of success in their careers yet they still require professional career services for self-actualization purposes. He may be unsatisfied with the way his career is going, for example.

â€¢ Pre-retirement and retirement individuals also need professional career services to help them ease into a new world after spending the prime of their years in the workplace. Indeed, professional career services are an imperative need if and when you want to be successful in your chosen career in particular and in your life in general.

What Benefits Await

What exactly are the benefits that come with hiring career services professionals? First, you will have a broader view of your options as these relate to present and future trends in the job market. You may have a limited view of your place in the job market, which career management service professionals can expand with a few well-meaning discussions. Your edge then lies in your knowledge of more job options suitable for your career goals.

Second, you have a deeper understanding of who and what you are as a person in relation to your career. Professionals who provide career services are equipped with the right set of tools and techniques to help their clients match their unique personalities, skills and capacities to the right jobs. In interviews, your in-depth knowledge of who you are, what you can contribute, and how well you can learn is an edge against your competitors for the job.

Third, you have additional support via the career services professional. Your colleagues will not enjoy the professional guidance when making career- and life-changing decisions, which you are enjoying. Professional career services can make your career more fulfilling, more rewarding and just generally more in tune with your personal goals â€“ and that is an edge in life in itself.
