Article published on August 24th 2012 | Career

Find me a career is the heart cry of many a college graduate, especially those who opted for general degree programs. After all med students pretty much know they are planning to be doctors but what about the accounting major or English Lit major? These are broader categories and finding a job after graduation may be more difficult than you imagined, particularly when there is economic turmoil in the world. Career services could be the answer you have been searching for, whether you are a new college graduate or experienced in your chosen field you could still be screaming for someone to help â€œFind me a Career!â€•

Job Hunting vs. Career Search

The first thing you need to understand is that jobs and careers are two very different animals. In most cases a job is something you do to pay the bills and while you may enjoy the work it is not really your life calling. On the other hand, a career is something that pays the bills while providing some personal satisfaction and foreseeable upward mobility. Basically searching for a career means finding something in line with your internal values, and searching for a job simply means finding a qualified position that will cover the bills.

If you have been working, a job for several years you may have given up on your dreams of a career, but even in a tough economy you can make the transition. You might just need a little help in the form of career services.

Career Services

How can career services help in your quest to â€œfind me a career instead of a jobâ€•? First off, they will help you define what is really important to you, those internal values mentioned above. What is it that makes you tick? Where do you find the most satisfaction? Going to work every day and finding those opportunities to advance is so much easier when you actually enjoy your â€œworkâ€•.

Do you have tunnel vision where your current career is concerned? Are you under the impression, at this stage in life, that you are pretty much stuck? Career services can help you see the bigger picture, even if you have been employed for 20 plus years! There may be paths available to you that you did not even know existed!

Conclusion

Whether you are just getting out of school or been in a particular field for many years, career services can help â€œfind me a careerâ€•. Why settle for the first job that comes along only to find you are miserable because it does not line up with your core values or passions?

Article Source:
http://www.articleside.com/career-articles/many-benefits-of-career-services.htm - Article Side

Career Illuminator - About Author:
Career Illuminatorsâ€™s career counselors have given career satisfaction advice to hundreds of people, helping each of them a career services that inspires them. We provide the tools for achieving career satisfaction, a career management, career planning and personal development. Please visit out website for more information: www.careerilluminators.com

Article Keywords:
find me a career, career services, career development, career management, personal development, career planning, Career advice, career counseling, how to change jobs, change jobs, career plan

You can find more free articles on Article Side. Sign up today and share your knowledge to the community! It is completely FREE!