The shirt cuffs are a small but critical part of a manâ€™s wardrobe. Besides the collar, the cuff is the only visible part of a manâ€™s shirt when he is wearing a jacket. When worn correctly, single cuff or double cuff shirts can add a polished look to a gentlemanâ€™s ensemble.

Button Cuffs

Button cuffs, or single cuff, wrap around the arm and are buttoned into place. The most common button cuffs have a single button or may be adjustable with two buttons placed side by side. A single cuff shirt is often the most prominent style found on ready-made shirts. Certain custom shirt designers carry shirts with two buttonholes and two vertical buttons â€“ a more formal style called the Barrel cuff. The smaller button â€“ the gauntlet button â€“ is intended to prevent the area from opening and exposing the wrist. The gauntlet button is a sign of a quality made shirt, a detail youâ€™ll find in abundance in Emmett London.

French Cuffs

The more formal option, French cuffs are also appropriate for daily wear depending on your location. The French cuff is a double cuff, folded back and fastened with cufflinks. Cufflinks give your ensemble a distinguished and sophisticated look, especially if you choose a quality design. There are other options available for double cuff shirts, such as fabric knots. French cuffs are not meant to be rolled up, so may not be appropriate for working men who tend to roll up their sleeves.

Whether you choose a single cuff shirt or the more dapper French cuff, consider both your entire ensemble and the occasion to which youâ€™ll wear the shirt. Though not every man needs a multitude of French cuffed shirts, your closet should include at least one or two. You will want a wardrobe of variety: single cuff, double cuff, cord shirts, and slim fits shirts.

Look no further than Emmett London on Jermyn Street for all your wardrobe needs. Emmett London carries a wide range of single and double cuff shirts, as well as cord shirts, slim fit shirts, and a customized made-to-measure service that ensures youâ€™ll always look your very best.
