For a shopping enthusiast there is nothing better than getting a great bargain on something that they have been looking for. While shopping centers and malls do have their loyalists there is real pleasure in browsing through flea markets in the hope of finding a real treasure. Every city has its flea markets and these are very popular and vide-greniers too are good places to find unusual and rare things. It is usually things that have gone out of circulation that are most coveted at these lea markets and Europe especially has many well known flea markets. A date brocante is a place that has a mix of people selling items that are not usually found in shops, things that are handmade, old crockery and pictures, great books, pieces of jewelry all at throwaway prices if one is willing to hunt it down and bargain as well.

One can find out about the flea markets in your city or the city that you are travelling through from local guide books and from the locals. Many flea markets open only on certain days while others open at night giving the whole experience a magical feel. There are those who swear by flea markets and many bargain hunters find really rare things here. A date brocante must be browsed through leisurely and experienced. Good natured bargaining is the usual method of closing a sale and the end result leaves both the seller and the bargain hunter happy. While a flea market needs to be physically browsed through there is no reason why this too should not make it to the internet. With changing technology that has touched all our lives, information on flea markets and vide-greniers is also now available easily.

There are many online sites that offer a whole lot of information. France in particular has many flea markets and many of these are popular even with tourists. One can easily look for sites that have information on the popular markets and garage sales in the area that the browser is in. One can type in the city or town in France to find information on the flea markets held here and what are the popular products available here as well. Even someone holding vide-greniers can advertise on most of the sites for free and gain a lot of publicity for their sale. These sites also have information on yard sales, Christmas and Easter markets etc. Browse through the internet to find the information you need. Most sites have regularly updated information and accurate details on the flea markets in the area.

A very popular site for date brocante in France is Brocz and this site has a map that one can click on to find all the flea markets and garage sales in that area.
