My nephew was invited to a formal dinner recently and he started to panic because he had nothing to wear. After we had stopped teasing him that this was such a female lament, we decided to look around and try to find just what was available for him at such a short notice. He had out grown the suit which he had had made up for his aunt's wedding last year and his mother didn't want to spend too much on an outfit which he would probably only wear once, since there did not seem to be any other weddings in the near future. We found a great brand called Vivaki which seemed to be our best bet.

They have amazing clothes for boys from the ages of toddlers up to teenagers that you will be proud to the little man in your live dressed up and looking just like a dashing hero. The toddlers section will make your cherub look so sweet that you will forget that just a few hours ago, he was grubby and sticky and you had to clean him for the third time that morning already!

As for the teenage boy who is disrupting your life with his sullenness and strange mood swings, you will once again feel such a sense of tenderness for him when you see him looking uncomfortable all dressed up to the nines and looking so grown up. Formal wear can change the whole look of a person and this is even truer for children and in particular, boys. It is so rare to see them dressed up and on their best behaviour, hopefully, that it is lovely to behold them.

Vivaki has suits for all occasions from the semi formal which can be worn for a lot of different occasions, to suits which are suitable for weddings and formal dinners and balls. There are a variety of colours and styles and a lot of choice for bow ties, ties and cumber bands.

For my nephew we managed to find the perfect suit that did not cost too much and one that he was comfortable wearing, well as comfortable as a boy on the verge of becoming a teenager can be in a formal suit and tie, and one which he claimed that he would not be ashamed to be seen in.

My sister is proud of her son and we all love him very much, but even then we have to admit that although he is lovely and handsome, he is still a boy and is usually grubby and smelly from some match or practice or other. On the day of the formal dinner, we looked on in pride as he was driven away and decided that Vivaki had been a good find and that our little devil had never looked so handsome and we knew where to go to the next time any of us need to buy any kind of formal clothing for other little boys in the family.
