Role of Literature Review Term papers by David Simons

Article published on January 2nd 2012 | College

In conducting a research literature review is critical review of current knowledge to find the relevant information. After data collection this step is the most crucial and essential phase of a research. It can be said as an evaluation of previous research. During reviewing some particular literature one should keep in mind the research question and also the reason behind selecting the topic because it is not like maintaining a chronological catalogue of all the research sources. It is actually assessment of past research work. The process combines the summary and synthesis and has an organizational pattern, summary is just a recap of information and synthesis is re organization of facts, interpretation of data and it gives a new look or new analysis to a study.

The main aim of a Term paper is to create a new argument; it constructs a compelling and convincing debate with the help of available material and reading sources, so the process of literature review moves parallel with the pace of research process because through assessment of data we can find relevance and application of facts in a Term paper. Sometimes a separate portion is devoted to this vital part of a research but more often it is a part of introduction of a Term paper or thesis. Its purpose is to convey what knowledge and ideas which have been established on a topic. For a comprehensive research, literature review must be defined by research objectives. A Term paper could not be called as a significant study unless the data review is not contributed in construction of a new and thought provoking argument, it should not be the descriptive list of material sources.

Inspection of secondary sources of research is the foundational step for a useful and influential study it helps to enhance the ability of information seeking and search of valuable facts, it is supposed to be the foremost and integral part in making a thesis. Secondly it helps to build a critical judgment approach and art to integrate needed data. An influential study must be based on scanned and to the point analysis and it would only be possible when a researcher is aware of the art of literature review as a thesis must have possessed a thought provoking element and should not be a organization of data. It formulates those questions which help to formulate further study.

The review of related literature has a significant role in establishing a proper and complete research. It gives a direct route for the study and acts as stepping stone in writing a persuasive Term paper. Themes and concepts are more important than researcherâ€™s name; a study revolves around ideas not sources themselves. If a writer is giving bibliography separately then there is no need to start every paragraph with the name of a writer. Moreover the evaluated and identified relevant data helps to connect your arguments and gives it a unanimity and continuity. The selected theme or theory can be visible or can be taken a shape of thesis statement only when a researcher has the ability to think directly towards the topic and capability to scan the literature effectively. Literature review has an integral role in formulating a convincing Term paper.
