Below are five myths identified by Bergstrom-SEO company:

1. SEO is not set-it-and-forget-it â€“ You cannot successful run an SEO campaign with a onetime effort. It takes planning and ongoing work to be successful.

2. Websites should not be designed for just the search engines â€“ If a site is designed solely for the search engines then itâ€™s likely the website will not make sense to humans and ultimately will hurt the website in the long run.

3. All SEO efforts should not be directed at the homepage â€“ Websites no longer have a homepage. Most visitors come into a website via a side door or backdoor. These alternative doors are optimized with keywords so that they attract the best possible visitor for your product or service.

4. The results of SEO work will last â€“ As stated in myth one, SEO is a continuous effort and the effects that an SEO campaign has on rankings is not guaranteed to last. Just as youâ€™re working to gain a share, someone else too is working to knock you out.

5. I donâ€™t need a blog itâ€™s too much work â€“ If a blog is too much work then you need to think hard owning a business. Blogs and social media are great ways to spread the word about your business and work to create meaningful and useful content to boost your way to the top, if done correctly.
