Diablo 3 Leveling and Crafting Guide by Edward Martin

Article published on May 2nd 2012 | Computer

This Diablo 3 leveling guide provides some tips on the leveling process and how it should be progressed alongside crafting for optimal efficiency and in-game profit. The crafting feature is something that truly solidifies this expansion among the ranks of engaging MMOs out there. Diablo 3 crafting, including Blacksmithing and Jewel Crafting, when coupled with the new Auction House feature, provides players with ample potential to get rich and fabulously outfitted to impress.

Useful Leveling Tips

â€¢ Resist the urge to pick up every single item that drops from monsters. Not all of these confetti drops, when time considerations are factored in, are worth the trouble of carting around between vendors. Instead be more tactical and pick up the things that will bring in the most gold. Furthermore, rather than selling everything, try to either sell them on the auction house, or salvage and utilize them in crafting.

â€¢ Farming mobs is a great way tolevel in Diablo 3, however, in terms of time management and overall game experience, questing is preferable. Finish quest lines first to truly delve into the storyline of Diablo 3, and then farm in small bouts to shake things up. Once at max level, feel free to hit the farming for upgrades process with a vengeance! Sets look amazing and are going to be highly coveted.

â€¢ Balance selling higher ranked items for profit, with leveling up and training artisans as you progress.

Brief Diablo 3 guide to Artisans

Rather than players having to craft things themselves, this Diablo 3 guide outlines how Artisans are hired and then used to do the work for them!

Blacksmiths, through learning recipes from Pages of Training and Tomes, are artisans that construct armor and weapons which can then be socketed, gemmed, and either sold to vendors or other players, or worn. Salvaging is a free crucial service they provide, and is the main driving force behind their skill ups from Apprentice to Exalted. They take scrap of magic quality or b

They take scrap of magic quality or better, and transform or salvage it into crafting items that can then be used to create specialty and up to legendary items.

For the purposes of this Diablo 3 Class Guide, it must be made clear that jewelers are indispensable. They combine gems that adventurers pick up along their way to create more powerful versions; they add sockets into gear to increase its value and power, and for a cost can also remove gems from gear when more efficient options are available or crafted.
