Item hunting will be an important part of Diablo 3, just as it was in Diablo 2. In order to make your character better you will need to find class-specific items that enhance your character. You want your character to have good gear so that you can defeat some of the harder bosses in Diablo 3, as well as have an advantage over other players in PvP combat. It will also improve how quickly you go through the Diablo 3 leveling process, which can sometimes seem dreadfully long. In order to do these things successfully you will often have to go on "Diablo 3 item runs"

An "item run" is the process that is taken in order to go after some specific pieces of gear, or maybe just after a gear improvement. Players do this by visiting dungeons that they know have specific items, usually through the use of a Diablo 3 item guide, and then keep running the dungeon until the odds eventually play in their favor, and the item drops upon the floor for them to pick up.

A good example of an item run is in Diablo 2, when players were trying to get legendary weapons. One of these weapons was Arioc's needle, which could be found as a random drop in Hell Baal. In order to obtain the weapons, players would constantly kill creatures in this zone until they finally obtained it.

Just like in Diablo 2, items that are dropped are based on item rarity and usefulness. A legendary item will have an orange aura around it after it drops, while a magical item will still have a blue aura around it after it topples to the ground. This helps players identify the various rarities of dropped items, and should definitely be paid attention to.

As has become famous by the Diablo series of games, you will once again have the "grid inventory" that greatly limits the amount of items that you can carry based on the size of the items, rather than having each item take up the same amount of space. While this is much more realistic, it can often be very annoying when you find a rare item but realize that you cannot carry it because you do not have enough space. This is why you should not worry about the low quality items, but instead focus on the rare items and better magically-enhanced ones.

Hunting for a specific item can definitely be frustrating, especially for the players that remember having to farm the Zod Rune in Diablo 2, which had an abnormally small drop rate. However, through the use of a diablo 3 guide, this can be made a lot easier if a player is willing to go after the items, after the guide shows them in the right direction.

Diablo 3 leveling is much easier when you have better gear, and you are given the ability to kill monsters much quicker, which in turn enhances your leveling speed. Overall, gear will increase your leveling speed immensely if you can find the right rare items. Gear will also effect your ability to kill bosses and other players, so it is a vital part of any Diablo fans gaming experience.
